PD 541/541G: Grantwriting Across the Disciplines

Learn About the Valuable Skill of Grantwriting While Completing Coursework Completely Online!

Truman State University is offering interested students the opportunity to acquire valuable skills in grantwriting in a convenient and affordable way with a full-semester, fully-online course for both undergraduate and graduate students.

Why Grantwriting?

- It’s a Skill in Demand! Employers need people who can help secure additional resources for their organization. Plus, the writing skills translate well into other common workplace tasks.
- It Can Help Your Organization’s Bottom Line! In a tight economy, grants are becoming a critical source of funds for both profit and non-profit organizations.

Why Grantwriting at Truman?

- It’s Affordable! Truman tuition is among the most affordable among public institutions in the Midwest—at both the undergraduate and graduate level.
- It’s Convenient! Online courses allow students to access content when their schedule allows them and to collaborate with classmates and their professor across great distances.
- It’s Informed by Experience! Your professor is an experienced grantwriter with numerous successful applications and awards in her portfolio.

How Do I Enroll?

Current Truman students may register for the course using normal registration procedures in Truview. Students not currently enrolled at Truman will need to complete a Non-Degree Seeking Student application.

For more information and step-by-step directions, visit the Institute for Academic Outreach’s website at http://institute.truman.edu/grants/ or call (660) 785-5384.